

District Training Series Workshops

“Curriculum, Character, and the Secondary Classroom”

Join Nicole Diehl and Roxanna Mechem as they explore the intersections of Curriculum and Character in Secondary Classrooms. Educators will explore the importance of curriculum, pedagogy, materials selection, and opportunities for student practice in the quest to shape character-based outcomes.

Your district's goals for graduates or portrait of a graduate character-based outcomes (such as innovation/creativity, communication, compassion/empathy, collaboration, critical thinking, global citizenship, etc) don't spontaneously develop. Character outcomes must be nurtured. This can be challenging, especially in secondary settings where content demands are high.

This session will review the basic requirements of the human brain for learning and suggest simple and effective ways to use strategies in conjunction with content to bring your character goals into everyday use.

All participants will receive a free resource to take back to their district. This session is best suited for classroom teachers (secondary), curriculum developers, and instructional coaches.
